- In the Nursing and Medicine degrees, teaching is based on innovative methodologies such as the flipped classroom, problem-based learning and clinical simulation.
- A training and skills process that balances theoretical and practical elements of the main areas of the health system: acute hospitalisation, social and health centres and primary and community care.
- Practical experience from the first year thanks to agreements with hospital, primary care and social health care centres, enabling students to gain professional experience from the outset of their degree. Assessment is continuous and formative, with the aim of strengthening the learning processes.
